Western North Carolina LGBTQ+ Presentation

This presentation is designed to outline the structures that contribute to high rates of suicide in counties along the Tennessee border of Western North Carolina, as well as facilitate a larger discussion examining high rates of suicide among those in the LGBTQ+ community. In doing so, this presentation does not attempt to draw any concrete connections in the form of causation or correlation between the two topics. Rather, a shared space is given to both in order to propose further research to fill in the gaps that exist within the two spheres.
